ALBERT MALLARD BARNES, Class Secretary.

NOTE.

The asterisk [*] is used to mark the names of deceased members.

PREFACE.

Classmates, — I come to you once more, and offer for your perusal the Fifth Report of our Class, and, for the sake of uniformity with all publications of this nature, I tender my thanks to all those who answered my circular within the time therein specified. To those who responded only to my second and third appeals I am grateful, though, naturally, in a less degree, while for those who have taken no notice of my requests for their history, I can only say that I have done the best I could despite their silence.

There is one other point to be touched upon, not alone for the sake of uniformity, but for the benefit of you all, and that is the Class Fund. Eighty classmates have subscribed $4,829.38, and of this I have received $4,090.38; so you see the class expenses are borne by about one-half of its members. We ought to have a fund of at least $5,000.00, and I trust those of you who have not yet contributed will avail of this excellent opportunity to do so.

For the record that follows I ask your careful attention, and will thank you, one and all, to notify me at once of any errors or omissions found therein.

ALBERT M. BARNES,

Class Secretary.

Kaupe, of Crefeld, Prussia; arrived home in July, 1874, and has since been following the study of philosophy; August 1, 1873, Nelson Kaupe Townsend was born.

"Further than this, I can only say that I'm still in the stream, tugging at the oars with all my might, as I have been for some ten years; but the landscape doesn't change so fast as in some of our spectacular dramas. In fact, it doesn't seem as if I had done much else than keep above water, and head to the stream. I've had, to be sure, some successes, but they proved to be of the partial and ephemeral kind. In the spring of 1876, for instance, I lectured on 'Tennyson's Epic of Arthur,' and got crowned with a meagre sort of wreath, which still hangs on my walls, a pretty faded affair, I can assure you. Then, in 1879, I started a weekly, called 'The Comment,' with intent to cleanse the political world of some of its unrighteousness, and to put into the pillory all persons in unlawful possession of the confidence of their fellow-citizens. A few spoke well of it, but the most paid it about as much attention as they would a scrap of paper fluttering in the gutter. After some dozen weeks of gasping, it died, like a fish out of water, which it certainly was. But it had not been wholly unsuccessful, and I laid it away in the hope of a happy resurrection for it. I'm now engaged upon a novel, and have been working at it in a desultory way for some time; a long time, I may say,— so long, in fact, that a friend once observed that 'he hoped it wouldn't be a posthumous work!' I share his hope, and being in health and near the end of the fiction, I trust that I shall be in the flesh when it is in print."

TOWNSEND, HENRY C. Was principal examiner in the Patent Office at Washington, specially devoted to the examination of applications for patents on electrical inventions, (which position he obtained through a competitive examination), from the spring of 1877 until November, 1880, when he resigned, moved to New York, and devoted himself to the practice of patent law; April 25, 1879, was married to Kate H. Goodall, of Washington; March 25, 1880, Marian Goodall Townsend was born; July 1, 1881, Henry Dillingham Townsend was born; January 16, 1883, Kate Townsend was born.

MEETINGS.

The Third Triennial Dinner of the Class was given at the Parker House, Boston, June 29, 1880. Sixty-two members were present. Dudley H. Bradlee presided, Jabez Fox was toastmaster, and Frank Merriam was chorister. At a business meeting, held before the dinner, there was some discussion as to the nature of the entertainment to be provided for the Class on Commencement Day, and the Class Committee were given full powers to act in the matter. The Committee subsequently decided to provide only claret punch, hock, and lemonade.

Commencement, June 30, 1880.

Business meeting was held at Holworthy 13, E. B. Hagar presiding.

A tribute of respect to the memory of James Rownd Morris was read and approved, and ordered to be placed on the records of the Class.

The Committee on a Memorial Window reported inexpedient to take any further action on the matter, and their report was accepted and the Committee discharged.

A motion was made that, after our Decennial Dinner in 1881, we should only have a dinner once in five years; but this was voted down by a large majority. Adjourned.

Decennial Dinner, June 23, 1881.

The Decennial Dinner of the Class was given by subscription at the Parker House, Boston, June 23, 1881. Thirty members were present, and though the dinner was a jolly, informal affair, it was voted a great success by all present.

Commencement, June 29, 1881.

Business meeting of the Class was held at Holworthy 13, at 12.30 P.M., Dudley H. Bradlee presiding.

The Secretary's annual report was read and accepted.

Tributes of respect to the memory of Charles Peasley Dana, Richard Gordon Greenough, Osgood Hodges, and Charles Burnham Sanders were read and approved, and ordered to be placed on the records of the Class. Adjourned.

Commencement June 28. 1882.

Business meeting of the Class was held at Holworthy 1, at 12.30 P.M., S. D. Bush presiding.

The Secretary made his annual report, and read a tribute of respect to the memory of Clarence Hereford Berry, which was approved and ordered to be placed on the records of the Class. Adjourned.
